READING ACTIVITIES · BOOK FIVE

Maintenance and Functional Exercises for use with The Laidlaw Basic Readers

To the Teacher: The broad purposes of this reading activities book are two-fold:

- 1. To give pupils practice in basic reading skills which lead to a mastery of the essentials of reading.
- 2. To permit pupils to be constantly aware of which skills they are practicing and how these skills will help them.

The methods of bringing about these purposes are also two-fold:

- 1. By addressing pupils directly on each page, telling them what to do and why they should do it.
- 2. By providing exercises that obviously make possible the learning that is expected of the pupils.

In this book activities precede selections when added preparation for reading with understanding seems desirable. Exercises follow all selections on which further work is desirable. These preparatory and conclusive exercises should be read strictly in conjunction with the appropriate selections in The Laidlaw Basic Reader. The teacher will note that all main exercise headings, indicating the beginning of work for a certain selection, are printed in bold type. All subheadings, indicating a continuation of work with a certain selection, are printed in italic type.

Following the exercise material covering a section of reading material in the reader, are review exercises. Following the review pages is a reading speed test. These tests are provided for the purpose of helping the teacher free pupils from the bad results of wasting time while reading.

The exercise material in this series of activities books supplements, and does not duplicate, the exercises in The Laidlaw Basic Reader. The activity books are offered with the thought that the exercises will provide additional training in the mastery of basic reading skills. These skills are listed at the end of the first selection in each of the Laidlaw Basic Readers, Four, Five, and Six.

Teacher and pupils alike will find the pattern of procedure clear, and the exercises interesting and helpful.

Using Book Aids

Two of the important helpers in your reader are the table of contents and the glossary. You should know how to use these aids. The table of contents gives you titles, authors, and the number of the page on which each selection begins. The glossary gives you pronunciations and definitions of difficult words.

The exercises below will help show you the uses of these two book aids. Turn first to page 3 of your reader.

	Who wrote the story "An Ocean Fishing Trip"?
	On what page is the poem "In the Streams"?
3.	On what page is the story "A Hero of our Navy"?
4.	Who wrote "The Story of Steel"?

Activities Following the Story "The Runt Comes Through."

Understanding the Main Thought

Almost everything you read has a main thought or idea. In reading a selection you should always understand what the main thought is. The exercises on this page will give you a chance to think about the main thought in each part of the story "The Runt Comes Through." You have already chosen, on page 20 of your reader, the sentence that best tells the main thought of the whole story.

	What is the main thought in the part called "Prepared"?
• • • •	••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
2.	What is the main thought in the part called "The Opportunity"?

3.	What is the main thought in the part called "The Hero"?

Why Selections Are Organized

Stories or articles longer than two or three pages are often divided into parts. Books are divided into chapters. Longer works, like encyclopedias, are divided into volumes. You have seen that the story "The Runt Comes Through" has three parts. The story is organized this way so that you may read it and understand it more easily. Each part tells different things about the story, but they are all connected. If you left one part out the story would not be complete. The exercises here will help you see the value of organizing material so that it may be easily understood.

Preparation for the Selection "A Popular Hobby."

Use Your Experience

Whenever you read you should make use of all you know and all you have done. For example, if you know and have played baseball you understood the first story easily. Your experience helped

you. Always remember to use your experience when you read. The exercises on this page will ask you to tell of experiences you have had. They will help you understand the next selection in your book.

1. Draw a line under the words that best tell what a hobby is. work done often for pleasure a wooden horse Draw a line under any hobbies you have or have had. collecting stamps collecting insects collecting stones collecting shells collecting marbles collecting coins collecting match packs collecting plants collecting flowers collecting minerals collecting arrow heads collecting relics 3. How do you think collections should be taken care of?

Activities Following the Selection "A Popular Hobby."

Making an Outline

If you outline a story you can see how it is made. This is a useful exercise because it helps you see that writing needs a plan. Without a plan a story may just go on and on and not have any purpose. With a plan or outline it becomes clear and well made. Fill in the outline form below. Write the most important details under the headings given below.

Complete this outline for the third paragraph on page 37. You will need to read the paragraph again.

Numbering and Cataloguing Specimens

1.	Why specimens should be numbered and catalogued
	(a) Labels may get lost
	(b) Some specimens are too small to label properly
2.	How each specimen should be numbered

Build Your Vocabulary

In order to read well, understand well, and express yourself well, you must know and use many words. Many pages in this book will help you build your vocabulary, just as the exercises here will help you. Always try to understand a word by the way in which it is used. But if you cannot see the meaning through the way the word is used, look it up in the dictionary. The first number after each word below is the number of the page on which the word appears; the second number shows the line on the page where the word is used. Read the sentence that uses the word, then write the meaning of the word.

Know Your Dictionary

The dictionary has many uses. It does more than give the meanings of words. You will learn most of the uses of a dictionary in this book. On this page you will learn how words in the dictionary are marked to show accent. Accent means speaking one part of a word with more emphasis than you use on another part. The accent on the word careful, for example, comes on the first part: CAREful. But instead of using big letters to show accent the dictionary uses a mark like this '. The dictionary marks careful this way: care' ful. Find each word in the list below in your dictionary and mark each one as the dictionary does for accent.

Finding Information

Do you know where to look for more information about subjects that interest you? One kind of book that has much information is called an encyclopedia. Encyclopedias are sets of several books. They have on their backs letters that tell you, or words that tell you, by the alphabet, where you may find the information you want. For example, in Volume A, you would find only subjects beginning with that letter: Atlanta, Atlantic, and so on. In Volume BC you would find subjects beginning with the letters B and C.

The exercises below will give you practice in knowing where to look for information in encyclopedias. Choose from the row of letters given, and write on the blank lines, the volume letters you would look for to find information on the subjects listed.

Beauty in Poems

When a poet sees something he likes or thinks is beautiful, he makes word pictures about it. His word pictures make a poem, and when you read the poem you see what the poet saw. Often the word pictures are beautiful, just as some painted pictures are. Often the poet uses words and phrases that are beautiful. Sometimes the words sound alike, or rhyme, and make a pleasant repeated sound. In many ways a poet is a friend and maker of beauty. Exercises on this page will help you see beauty in a poem. There is beauty in most poems.

Speak in Different Ways

You should learn to use variety in your talking. No one should speak always in the same way. Different ideas should be spoken in different ways—some quietly, some excitedly, some as commands, others as questions, and so on.

This page will help you practice variety in speaking. How would you say each of the following sentences taken from the story you have just read?

- 1. "Hurrah!" yelled Bob. "I've been waiting all summer for this."
- 2. "Why can't I use mine?" said Bob, somewhat disappointed.
- 3. "Very well," said Bob's father. "Let me try them."
- 4. "Hi there!" called Bob.
- 5. "Cast off, Pop Eye," called the captain to the deck hand.
- 6. "Oh, a sailor's life is the life for me," he began to sing.
- 7. "Nothing but mackerel," growled the captain.
- 8. "Heave to!" yelled the captain.
- 9. "I've got a bite! I've got a bite!"
- 10. "I should say not," gasped Bob.
- 11. "I guess—I—haven't—any," said Bob.
- 12. "Yellowtail!" shouted the captain.
- 13. "Uncle Jim," he said suddenly, "what kind of a fish is a yellowtail?"
- 14. "Keep reeling steady, sir," said the captain.
- 15. "White sea bass!" said the captain. "And a dandy!"
- 16. "Please give us the best you have."
- 17. "Why can't we fish anywhere?" asked Bob.

Remember Important Details

It is important to remember the details that help build the main ideas of a story. On this page you are asked to show that you remember some important details of the Robin Hood story. This is a

"take your choice" page. Follow the directions for doing exercise 1. In exercises 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, draw a line under the words that will make each sentence complete.

1. Draw a line under each sentence below that is true.

Robin Hood was a sheriff.

Robin Hood was a potter.

Robin Hood was kind to the poor.

Robin Hood wanted to be an enemy of the king.

Robin Hood pretended he was a potter.

All the men lived in log huts in the forest.

The sheriff thought Robin Hood was a good archer.

Robin Hood captured the sheriff.

Marian and Robin were married by the king.

Robin was glad to stop being an outlaw.

Big John was one of Robin's men.

- 2. Robin Hood was a lawyer. a knight. an outlaw.
- 3. Robin Hood is a popular story hero because he lived a life of action. lived in a forest. loved Marian.
- 4. Marian liked life in the woods because she loved green clothes. fresh air. Robin Hood. Little John.
- 5. When Robin beat the sheriff's men at shooting they were glad. angry. puzzled. well pleased.
- 6. When the sheriff returned, all the people were sorry for him. laughed at him. shook his hand.

Activities Following the Poem "Sir Guy and Robin Hood."

Know the Words

Sometimes it is possible to get meaning from a poem without knowing exactly what some of the words mean. But in order to understand anything fully you must know it exactly. The exercises on this page will help you see how well you know some of the words in the poem about Robin Hood. Find the words in the poem as you do these exercises.

Do You Read Fast Enough?

People do not all read at the same speed, any more than they walk or run at the same speed. But everyone should learn to read as fast as he can without missing anything important. You cannot read with proper speed unless you keep your mind on your work. You cannot think of other things while reading, and still read well. So the first lesson to learn is the lesson of concentration: think only of one thing at the time you are doing it.

The exercises on this page will help you and your teacher test your reading speed. When the teacher tells you to, turn to page 42 in your book and read all of the part called "Collector's Slogan—Be Prepared." Then answer the questions below.

1.	What does the writer say about starting a collection unless you)U

Finding and Remembering Information

The value of the selection you be asked to show that you have have just read is in the facts it understood and remembered some tells you. On this page you will of these facts.
1. Write in your own words what lightning is
2. How did Franklin experiment with lightning?
• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •
3. How do lightning rods protect houses from lightning?
4. What are the "northern lights"?

Other Uses of Dictionaries and Glossaries

You have learned that the glossary and dictionary give you definitions and the accent of words. They also give you what is called phonetic, or word-sound, spelling. With this spelling other special marks are used, called diacritical marks. When you understand these marks you can be certain of the pronunciation of any word in the glossary or dictionary. These marks are explained by example on page 441 of your reader, and they appear at the bottom of every page in dictionaries.

Doing the exercises on this page will give you practice in how to understand phonetic spelling and diacritical marks. Copy after each word below everything the glossary or dictionary has except the definition. Find the first two in the glossary, and the others in the dictionary.

Reading Other School Subjects

Remember that reading skills are not learned just for the reading you do in your reading class. They should be used in all the reading that you do, both in school and out. Also, much of the material in your readers helps you understand and increase the value of reading you do in other subjects. For example, the facts about thunder and lightning will help you in other nature study. Such facts are also connected with geography. The exercises on this page will help you see how this is true. Use your reading skills in all subjects.

Activities Following the Poems "The Storm" and "The North Wind."

Reading Poems

Have you ever tried to describe a thunder storm or a strong wind? Have you found it hard to describe such things so that others could see clearly and hear clearly what you had seen and heard? These two little poems you have read do in a pleasant simple way what you may often have tried to do. The poems have word pictures of what

It is easy for you to see these word pictures, isn't it? The poets also use rhyme, or words that sound alike, to make the poems more pleasant. Whenever you read poems try to see the word pictures. Then practice making these pictures in your own words. Here you will have practice in that exercise.

Organizing and Remembering Material

The selection "Modern Pioneers" contains much interesting information which you should remember. Read the selection carefully and make an outline showing the ideas which you want to remember. Perhaps you will choose these topics for the main headings in	your outline. 1. Famous men who worked to protect birds. 2. How the government protects wild life. 3. How men and women can help. 4. How boys and girls can help. Under each main heading list the important facts about it and letter them (a), (b), and so on.

Using an Index

It is helpful in some kinds of books to have an index. In an index you can find topics quickly in such subjects as history and geography. If you wanted to find information about George Washington, for example, in an American history book, you would look in the index for Washington. His name would be there listed in order of the alphabet, under the W's. With his name would be given the numbers of the pages in the book that tell something about him. Learning to use an index will help you save time in your study. The exercises on this page give you practice in using an index.

Beauty in Poems

Some part of nature is often chosen by poets as a subject for a poem. The poet sees a bit of nature that he likes, and makes a word picture of it. By the use of rhyme and a careful choice of words, and other skills known to a poet, these pictures of nature are made pleasant. The exercises on this page will give you practice in finding rhyming words and in seeing how they are used.

Opinions About Story Characters

Readers of stories that are true or nearly true have opinions about characters in those stories just as they have about people in real life. We like or dislike characters in stories. We admire them or have no respect for them. In fact, while reading good stories the reader thinks of the characters as real people. As practice in forming opinions about characters, do the exercises on this page.

Do You Read Fast Enough?

Remember that the important thing about your reading speed is your ability to think only of what you are reading as you read it. The directions and exercises here will give you more practice in that ability. Turn in your readers to page	91. Use Your Reading Experience

Your history book is filled with facts about history. History tells what happened in the past. It is not the purpose of history books to tell stories. Yet there are many fine stories that are based on history. History facts are used, but stories are told about the facts. Have you ever read such stories? This page will ask you to use your reading experience in answering that question and others.

Activities Following the Story "Knights of the Silver Shield."

Think for Yourself

Many times in stories you read about happenings that could not be true. Yet as you read the story, if it is interesting, you accept the happenings as parts of a good story, true or not. And often these things that are not true stand for something that is true. The exercises on this page will help you think for yourself about this idea.

1. Explain in your own words what is said about the silver shields and the stars that sometimes could be seen on them

Express Your Opinion

Whenever you read a story you can find things to think about that were not actually in the story. A good story suggests other thoughts and ideas to you. It is well to make use of these ideas. They help give you experience in thinking about your reading. They also increase your understanding so that you can read new stories and like them. When these values appear, the story is well worth reading. This page contains exercises that will help you think, and also express opinions.

1. There are no real giants, and never were, but what do you think the giants may stand for in the story?

Activities Following "A Story of Independence."

Always Use Your Reading Skills

The story about independence is very much like some of the material you read in history books. It presents facts and details that have to be understood before you can understand the main thoughts. This is always true in reading history, also. It is important to remember that in reading history and other school subjects—as well as the reading you do out of school—you should use all your reading skills. The exercises on this page will help you remember that.

How Would You Say It?

Many poems contain word pictures, a story, and ideas. The poem "Independence Bell" contains those qualities. Some of the story information given in it is the same as that you found in the story about independence that you have read. On this page you will gain practice in expressing in your own words some of the ideas and word pictures in the poem.

How would you express in your own words the following lines and phrases from the poem? Find how they are used in the poem before writing your answers.

Think for Yourself

It is important that you learn the ability to think independently. One of the subjects on which people think is that of patriotism. It is important to know how to express yourself on this important subject. It is important not only to be patriotic but to be able to express your patriotism in words and deeds. On this page are exercises that will help you gain this ability in thinking and expressing thoughts of your own. The exercises are based on the three ways of expressing patriotism as outlined on page 194 of your reader.

Activities Following the Poem "The Flag."

Find Words That Sound Alike

	As you know, many poems use rhyming words, or words that sound alike. In order to appreciate poems that use rhymes, you should be able to recognize words that sound alike. You should be able to do this without thinking about it too much. If you have to stop and wonder about the sounds, you do not enjoy the poem. For that reason you should practice reading and	finding words that sound alike. The exercises on this page will give you practice in this activity. Study the words in the list carefully. Then write on the lines below each pair of words in this list that sound alike: flag, hail, caress, dread, bars, cheer, head, bless, stars, drag, trail, hear, man, soon, saw, sink, sound, moon, round, claw, tan, think.

Are You Reading Fast Enough?

When you read some exciting story for pleasure, probably nothing takes your attention away from your story. This is the habit of concentration that you should have in all your reading. See how well you can concentrate now on this fast-reading lesson. Remember that the most important things are to understand what you read, and not waste time reading it.

When your teacher tells you to begin, read the first two paragraphs on page 161. Read them carefully enough to understand them fully. Then do the exercises below, and raise your hand to let the teacher know when you have finished.

Activities Following the Poem "Vision."

Finding Meaning in Poems

Sometimes poems have in them more suggestions than story facts.
When that is true the poems are not always easy to understand.
But often such poems are very beautiful, so it is worth while to try to understand them. One of the best ways to make sure of your understanding is to say in your words what you think the poet is saying in his. And remember this: in poems of this kind the meaning does not have to be exactly the same for all readers.

The exercises on this page will give you practice in expressing meaning. Write in your own words the meaning you find in each of the three stanzas of the poem "Vision."

Preparation for the Story "The Prize of the Tapestry Weavers."

Think of Beauty

People in the older countries have been making and liking beauty for many hundreds of years. They made beautiful things with their hands, long before there were machines. One of their forms of beauty making was weaving. They wove for beauty as well as for use. One of the things they wove was tapestry. The tapestries showed pictures, woven in color, of actions the weavers had heard of and admired, or actions they imagined. These tapestries were often very beautiful.

The activities on this page will help you think about beauty that can be made without the aid of machines.

1. What have you or someone you know ever made by hand with clay or some other material?
•••••••••••••••••
2. If you were to weave pictures of actions into a large tapestry, what story or actions would you choose to picture?
Why?
3. How do you think a poor boy of long ago, who was fond of beauty, would feel if given a chance to work with a famous weaver of tapestries?

Activities Following the Story "The Prize of the Tapestry Weavers."

Understand the Main Thought

Sometimes by finding and writing down the main thoughts of a selection, you can find the heading that would be most useful in an outline. Then by finding the details that make the main thoughts	true you find the subheads for an outline. On this page write the main thoughts of each section of this story. On the next page you will put these thoughts, and the details that support them, in outline form.

Build Your Vocabulary

Sometimes certain words remind you of other words, as you learned in reading the selection "Word Weavers." Making lists of words that are suggested by other words is a good way to build your Activities Following the Play "Why the Princess Couldn't Stay."

Express Your Opinion

This play shows you how a selection may have a teaching purpose, and still entertain you. The exercises on page 330 in your reader give you practice in finding meaning and correcting speech faults.

On this page the exercises will help you tell why the little play about an imaginary princess was entertaining.

1. Do any of the people in this play seem natural and real to you Which ones?
2. In what ways does the author of this play make most of her play people real?
3. How does it help in a play like this to have most of the play people natural?
4. What are some of the amusing happenings or sayings in this play

Learn to Find Beauty

You have learned that beauty is of many kinds. One kind of beauty often seen is shown in paintings. Sometimes it is not possible to see great paintings, because they are likely to be in museums in large cities. If you live in a large city it is easy to see paintings. But everyone may see copies of paintings, and photographs of paintings, and these are often beautiful. Before reading about a great American painter, tell something about what you know already about pictures. The exercises here will help you tell of pictures you have seen.

1. How many colors can you find in the picture on page 317 of your reader?
2. How does the picture on page 309 tell you that Jacques is poor, that Beatrix is not poor, and that both children are interested in what the weaver is doing?
••••••••••••••••••
•••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
3. Where are Jacques and Beatrix in the picture on page 305? Be ready to point them out.
4. What are the main differences you notice right away between the picture on page 301 and that on 331?

Making an Outline

Remember that it is important, in making an outline, to use headings and subheadings that will show a plan clearly. Your outline should be so clear that anyone using it may follow with it the material it is based upon, or build from it material that is to be written. In	order to get more practice in make ing a clear outline, make one with all important details for just the first part of this selection. Use "The Young Artist" as your main head ing, and letter the details under it as (a), (b), (c), and so on, using as many letters as you need.

Activities Following the Poem "A Comparison."

Finding Beauty in Poems

The title of the poem you have just read showed you that two or more things were going to be compared. Then as you read you found what those things were: snow and apple blossoms. The poem might also have been called "A Contrast," because differences or contrasts between apple blossoms and snow are pointed out. By comparing and contrasting, showing things alike and different, poets often create the word pictures they want.

The exercises here will help you see the comparing and contrasting word pictures in this poem.

Activities Following the Selection "The Boy Who Climbed the Church Steeple."

Think for Yourself

In a story like this many facts are told, but the author expresses no direct opinion about the character of the main person in the story. But after reading such a story you should be able to form and express your own opinion of the character.

The exercises on this page will help you in that kind of thinking.

1. What are the main facts given about Christopher's boyhood?
2. What opinion, based on these facts, do you have of the character of the boy Christopher?
3. What are the main facts about Wren's later years?
•••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••
4. What opinion do you have of Wren's work as a man?

•••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••••

The exercises on this page and on page 78 will help you find out how much you remember about the stories and poems in this part of your reader. If there are some details that you cannot remember, skim through your book and find them.
1. Who was called a "master of music"?
2. What word pictures did you see in the poem "Vision"?
3. What prize did Jacques win?
4. Why did Jacques win the prize?
5. Who are "word weavers"?
6. Why couldn't the princess stay?

Are You Reading Fast Enough?

Whenever you find yourself thinking of something that interrupts what you are reading, close your mind to that interruption and think only of your reading. It is not always easy to catch yourself right at the start of the interruption. But if you keep trying to concentrate, and understand why you should, concentration will become easy for you. Do not waste time while reading, and you will read fast enough.

When the teacher tells you to, turn to page 344 of your reader and start reading the paragraph that begins "Each year he stayed.

Remember Important Details

You can realize how important details are in the story of steel. Think of the details that the inventors had to plan before they could make the steel process perfect. Some of these details should be remembered by those who read about them. If the reader does not remember some of the important details, he has not found much value in the story.

This page will give you exercises that ask for details in the story you have read.

	Are you finding it easier to make outlines, and to see their value? On this page you will gain more practice in learning how to make a useful plan. Make an outline for the section	of the story of steel called "Modern Converters." Make up your own headings and subheadings, using the figures 1, 2, 3, and so on and the letters (a), (b), (c) and so on, or some other form if you prefer.

Facts in Poems

You know that poems often tell stories. It is also possible for them to be written about facts. But of course the poem must be more than just a list of facts. It must use the facts in a poetic way. The exercises here will help you think about variety in poems.

Activities Following the Story "The Life of a Sheepherder."

Story Characters

1. How did the rancher show politeness?

In this story there are people about whom you are told enough to form opinions. When an author tells you how people act and talk you should be able to form an opinion about them.

The exercises here will help you practice that ability.

Use the Dictionary

It should be easier now to use the dictionary. You should know well many of the ways in which it can help you. Have you gained the dictionary habit? It is one of the best habits you can have. The exercises on this page will give you more practice in the dictionary habit, and help you gain it.

Choose any fourteen words from the lists on pages 406 and 407 of your reader. Find each of the fourteen words in a dictionary.
Then copy each word as the dictionary spells it, marks it, and accents it for correct pronunciation.

Activities Following the Selections "A Calcutta Market," and "Paris Market."

How Would You Say It?

You have also had much practice in saying in your own words
what others have said in theirs.
It should be easier now for you to do that well. Doing this helps you compare your way of expressing something with the way in which a real writer has expressed it. It also tests your ability to understand what you read.

Exercises here will give you more practice in this ability. Write in your own words what is said in each sentence below.

1. In certain stores the prices are fixed; but in others, especially in the smaller ones, bargaining goes on, creating the noise so characteristic of the Indian market place
2. Some of these articles are sold every morning by small vendors.
•••••••
3. But buy a pound or two of these—
And see a dirty face all lost in smiling.

Writing "Tongue-twisters"

Some sentences are harder to say than others. Yet when we are speaking we want to be able to speak all words and all sentences clearly. Do you have any trouble saying the sentences on pages 414 and 415 quickly and clearly? This page will give you more practice with tongue-twisters.

Write some tongue-twisters of your own on the lines below. Try to make them interesting.

Activities Following the Selection "Cowboys Then and Now."

Think for Yourself

After you have read a short selection on a subject that interests you, you should be able to write in your own words a brief telling of what you have read. If you remem-	ber some of the facts and use them, and then think out the story for yourself, you can do this exercise. Do it now for the story called "Cowboys Then and Now."

Are You Reading Fast Enough?

In this book you have been given much practice in gaining reading skills. Also, you have been taught that reading fast enough means reading without any waste of time. Now that you have finished your reader and this book, do not stop learning and practicing reading skills. Continue to learn them and use them in all your reading.

When your teacher tells you to, turn to page 384 of your reader and read all of the part called "Kelly's First Tilting Converter," to the bottom of page 386. Then do the exercises below and raise your hand when you have finished all of them.

1.	Was Kelly easily discouraged?
